GENERAL SLAUGHTER BEGINS 1

GREAT CLOSING - OUT SALE

Hayden's Store,

STANFORD, KY.

Let the people read it in reeling italics. This is a bona-fide CLOSING - OUT, not a CLEARANCE SALE! Four Thousand Dollars sold in November; Ten Thousand MUST go in December. This is the week for the Bloody Slaughter of Prices! The biggest drives ever offered in Central Kentucky on First-Class Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Notions, Fancy Goods, Dry Goods, etc. Special Bargains in Overcoats. Gents' tailor-made Suits, stylish Hats, Gloves, Kentucky Jeans, Rubber Boots, Sandals, Arctics, Coats and Gossamers; Ladies' Wool Shawls, Skirts, Cloaks, Hosiery, Underwear, Fine Dress Goods, Trimmings. A special slaughter in medium Dress Fabrics, Ginghams, Flannels and Waterproofs. A fine display of Fancy Articles suitable for Christmas presents. The instructions to salesmen this week are: "Let 'em go! Sell 'em! Never mind the cost mark!" Now is the time and the Great Closing-Out Sale the place!

Having determined to quit the goods business on account of failing health, I have made up my mind to stand any sacrifice that is necessary to close out my

THE merry Christmas time is again upon not been made aware of it. Nor do we litical purposes. think that any one can grumble about the variety or the lack of a sufficient amount of reading matter. Certainly not this month at any rate, for of the seven issues sent out three have contained supplements and three bave been double numbers, with enough matter in them to fill a large hook. But we did not start this article to brag about our schievements, they speak for themselves whather good or had, but merely to extend the compliments of the seasome to our patrona and wish them a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

The San Francisco Examiner cays: "If there be in republicanism that which is enduring and as noble as republicans think, adversity will only serve to make its principles mere conspicuous. Hard rubbing is what gives the brilliancy to the steel, as pressure and combustion harden its fiber. There is nothing in delest to repine at. The democrats were in exile for twentyfour years, and came back into the sight of mon with their principles as firmly fixed as when they surrendered the government. That is a party of honor and principle which, while it has notbling to bestow, lives and waxes strong, and at last comes into the light of its own glory amid the acclamentione of the people."

THE Harrodeburg Citizen, which upholds the "majority" of the law as it expresses it, whatever that may mean, takes us to task Judge Morton vs. Tracie, of Lexington, for for criticizing the Court of Appeals and $500 for libel. mays we have no right to cast a stone. THE DEED IS DONE!

THE BATTLE IS RAGING! TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER.

THE GUNS ARE BOOMING AND A FEARFUL CUTTING IN THE WHOLE LINES!

A GREAT MANY WOUNDED, BUT NONE DEAD!

The above heading may read very sensational, but it is the full truth, that from this day on till January 1st (inclusive) every article in my Store will be offered AT AND BELOW COST! By doing this I will naturally lose memory during this red letter sale, but my customers as well as those who wish to patronize me shall be convinced that D. KLASS will not be undersold by any one.

Now s the time to take Advantage of this Great Opportunity and Lay in Your Supplies.

I have bought too heavy—the season for Fall Goods was short. The only remedy left for me is to unload (as I never believe in carrying stocks over from season to season) and the way of unloading quick is to put

The Bagger in the Prices up to the Handle, without regard of the Losses. My Motto is: "First Loss, Best Loss."

Here are some of the Cuts and Slashes that will be made, (I can not give them all, on account of limited space) during this RED LETTER SALE:

CHRISTMAS LEGENDS.

[Illustrated London News.] Scattered round the Christmas season, w find in our own and other countries a host of amusing old-folk tales, most of which, apart from their own intrinsic merits, are valuable as falthfully ambodying the superstitious be-liefs of our forefathers in connection with the Yule-tide festival. It would seem that, in days gone by, these fireside legends were extensively circulated at Christmas-tide, the varied incidents they contained acting as so many warnings to those who might, hadvertently or otherwise, be induced to disre gard the traditionary notions of the season,

As the greater part of these tales are novel probably to most readers, it may not be inopportune to give some illustrations of them.

Thus, Norwegian folk-tales often allude to the merry doings of the "Niss" at Christmae time—n class of fairles about the size of small children, and who were, we are reminded, far more numerous in the good old times than nowadays. Like Shakespeare's Puck, they are fond of pranks, and unless the master of the them, they are spiteful and vindletive, and hence it is not surprising that their good will is deemed worth securing. On Christmas Eve, therefore, offerings of sweet porridge, cakes, beer, and other delicacles are provided specially for them; but care must be taken that this act is performed with every mark of respect, otherwise they will quickly show their displeasure. Thus, it is related how, one Christmas Eve, when a girl in a mocking spirit brought those little beings their customnry offerings, she was so severely handled by them, that on the following Christmas morning she was found dead in the barn.

With tales of this kind toll among tho peasantry, and received by thom with the falth, wo can well im-how ready they naturally were to gain the patronage and friendship of these mysterious elves who, ln a thousand and one ways, could be riend those who acknowledged their superior power.

Among Norwegian folk-tales of the sea relating to Christmas, we are told how a certain sailor, according to custom, was desirous of presenting on Christmas Day a cake to the spirit of the waters; but when he came to the shore, lel-much to his disappointment-the waters were frozen over. Reluctant to leave his offering upon the ice, he tried to make a hole; but, in spite of all his labors, he could not make it large enough for the cake to go through. When perplexed as to what he should do, he was agreebly surprised by the appearance of a little, thry hand, as white as snow, which, stretching through the hole he had made, seized the cake and instantly disappeared with it. In this legend originates, it is said, the compli ment paid to a Norwegian bely, "Your band Is like n water sprite's."

The Norse peasant, in bis popular tales, has a curious solution for the oft-asked quest tion, "Why is the sea salt?" It appears, that once upon a time, loug, long ago, there were two brothers, one rich and the other poor, Now it imprened on Christmas Eve that the poer one had not so much us a crumb of bread to eat, so he went to his brother for help, who gave him n whole flitch of bacon, at the same time hidding him go to a certain evil nagician. On arriving at the magician's house, he was surrounded by a host of persons auxions to buy his 400 ch. "Well," said he, 'by rights my did dans and I ought to have this theon for our Christmus dinner; but since you have not set your hearts on it, 1] suppose you nest have it; but if I sell it all I must have in return that quern befind the door yourler. He wife, as to integined, stood thunderstruck, watching the query grief cut dhintie enough to hist till Twelfth Day. When, how ever, the rich brother saw, on Caristmas Day, all that was on the table, to we very the festival of the Epiphany, the are the flowers which touch the heart. There envious and said, "whence have you got at new-bern Divinity comes down from is connected with them some universal senti- when He was hiding, so they have to remain this wealth!"

For some time the poor brother refused to tell; but in the course of the day's rejoicing he incantionsly gave out the history of the magic quern, which his brother nitinutely for $300. Before long, however, he found that it kept on grinding, and so alarmed was he that he resold it to his brother for the same money that pur-to see the quern, and the first, question he asked was whether it could grind salt. "Grind salt?" sald the owner, "I should just think so; and anything elso you like." Thereupon, so anxious was be to buy the quern that he promised to pay untold wealth for it. Secured of his prize he put to sea and when so far off that no one could reach hlm, he said to the quern, "Grind salt, and grind both fact and good." No sooner had he spoken than the quern forthwith began grinding sait, which, in an amazing short time, arose in heaps on the deck and threatened to sink his vessel. Alarmed at the rapidity with which the queru kept grinding, he entreated it, on his knees, to leave off; but still it went on, and, before many minutes the vessel sauk be neath the weight of salt. But the quern, still beneath the water, keeps grinding, and hence the saltness of the sea. These tales, in which the witch element figures strongly, still exist In our own country. Thus, in the Isle of Man, it is related how a fiddler, having agreed with a stranger to play during the twelve days of Christmas to whatever company he should bring him, was astonished at seeing his new master vanish into the carth as soon as the bargain had been made. Terrified at the thought of having agreed to work for so mysterious a personage, he quickly resorted to the clergy-man, who advised him to fulfill his engagement and to play nothing hat psalms. Ac cordingly, as soon as Caristmas-tide arrived, the weird stranger made his appearance, and beckoned the fiddler a spot where the company were as-sembled. On reaching his dostination he at once struck up a psalm tune, which so enraged his audience that they instantly vanished, but not without so vio-lently bruising him that it was with some difficulty he succeeding in reaching home, and narrating his Christmas experience to the family as they were gathered round the

In Germany, Christmas Eve is the season of all others when fairles are supposed to be most active, keeping their festival on the mountain tops. Then, we are told, the rough stone is transformed into brilliant crystalveins of gold starting out artistically into magic pillars—beneath which graceful canopy feating and dancing are kept up with protracted exthusisms. The attendants on these fairy-gatherings are generally beautiful Swedish girls, who have unwarily partaken of the contents of the golden goldets offered to them by the fairies, and thus instantly fallen into their power. According to the legendary love found in most parts of Germany, the magic effect of these fairy potions is three-fold: "At the first draught from that horn he who drinks forgets Heaven; at the second he forgets earth; at the third he forgets his betrothed

Hence, on Christmas Eve persons are ommended to stay at home, because the faries on this night delight to waylay the lonely traveler, compelling him to take a draught of Christmas cheer from their en-

Among the large class of folk-tales connected with this superstition, may be quoted one which tells how, when a Christmas feast was being given in a German village, one of the guests, attracted by the sound of music from without, was induced to leave the festive acene indoors, and to wander toward the spot where the music seemed to come. He had, however, not gono many steps when he was met by two beautifu' girls, who asked him to join their Christmas gnmbols in a neighboring field, which, after n little persuasion, he consented to do. Ca arriving at the fairies' gathering, for such it was, he was surrounded by numberless little beings all anxious to welcome him; out of whom handed him a cup of wine, after drinking which he forgot his former state, and thought of nothing except the feasting and dancing of the fairles. When he had been enjoying himself in this manner for some time, the fairfes reminded him of his own home; but what was his astonishment when, on passing through the village to thid everything in decay, and all his relations and friends dead, for the spell of the fairle, cup on him had lasted 100 years. One German version of the well-known legend of the man in the moon connects this wretched individual's solitary imprisonment in that isolated region with his having stolen cabbages from his neighbor's garden on Christmas Eve. When just in the act of drawin escaping with his load he was perceived stone." by some passers-by, who, there and then, conjured him up into the moon. Thera he stands, in the full light of the moon, to be seen by everybody, having his stolen load of cabbages on his back for all eternity. He only has a minute's change one day in the year, when he is said to turn round once on

Again, the Wild Huntsman is said in Germany to make nightly excursions through the air for the twelve nights of Christmas, alarming all who hear him by his furious progress. He generally rides upon a large white herse, no less than four and twenty fierce dogs following him. According to n tale quoted by Mr. Thorpe, in his "Northern Mythology," in every place through which he passes the bedges fall with a crash, the road opening of its own accord before him. He rides with such speed that his degs often may be heard painting and howling. Oc-casionally one is left behind, is bappened one year at Walfstorf, where it remained panding, howling without intermission until the following Christmas Eve, when the Wild Huntsman again took it with him. Hence various precautions were formerly taken to prevent the Wild Huntsman opproaching any particular street. It is also considered dangerous to spin of Christmas time, or the Wild Huntsman will gallop through. On one occusion a weman refused to take the usual warning, and had ng sooner sat dow't to spin en Uhristings Eve than she fell into a deep ale p, and was only awakened by the entrance of a stranger, who, without any apology for introduce, she had, and on his asking for more, she well leally however, I a lept on calling for more, and the gained she is as they came treat curve my war made by Mis. CHRISTMAS CARDS.

A VISIT TO THE WORKSHOPS OF L PRANG & CO.

The Mysteries of Chrome Card Printing as Seen by a Party of Young Folks -The Essentials of a Popniar Card.

[Adapted from Wide Awake.] "First of all," said the manager, in reply to a question, "a card design must be pleasing to people in general; it must also possess a certain originality—a palpable freshness, or it will not attract attention to itself. And then it must convey a sentiment of congratulation, either for a holiday, a birthday, or some home anniversary. Of course, we rejoice if with these nonessary features it is also so beautiful as to a miniand the admira tion belonging to a fine work of art, rendering the card an object to be treasured indefinitely by the possessor.

"I must not forget to add," continuel he, "that the most beautiful painting, if offered us as a design, must be of such a nature as to be readily reproduced by lithography." Stepping to a table, he opened a large book to a picture in rich colors, "This," said he, "was reproduced by lithography from a painting. It is the result of thirty printings; that is, it was run through the press thirty times, each time receiving a new color or shade."

He turned from this gorgeous representation of a woman and child, which was on the last leaf, to the first leaf. This showed simple outlines of all the objects in the picture they had just seen. also outlines of each color in the picture. He then slowly turned one leaf after another; showing that the book was a very convenient dissection of the picture, displaying on its left-hand pages a fresh color printed by itself, and on its right-hand pages the same color printed in its proper relations with all the colors combined which had preceded it, the original design growing with each page more distinct and fuller in color and richer.

"Lithograpy means stone-writing," said the manager, leading the way into another apartment. "Lithographic printing means printing from writings or drawings made on stone. Chromo-lithography—our work—is printing in colors from drawings on stone." lie had taken the visitors into the artists' long room lighted with many win dows, looking out upon blue skies and green trees, and cooled by rows of automatic fans. By each of these windows sat an artist, at work with pen and ink upon a zinc plate, evidently copyling the painting before him. Pausing near one deak, the manager said, "This artist will be busy with this design three or four months. It is to have twenty-eight printings, and he has twenty-eight plates to make. First of all, he laid a thin sheet of gelatine, transparent as glass, over the original, and traced upon that the cut-lines of all objects and colors. This outline drawing be transfers to each of the twentyeight plates. You see this plate! The portions which he has worked with his pen in line and stipple, represent all the blue in the design. Here is the proof taken of it. Here is the plate where he worked all the yellow In the design, and here is the proof he took

He is now working on this plate, the red portions of the picture. These prints of single colors, and these prints of combinal colors, will be bound up together when the whole twenty-eight plates are completed, and will be the guide-book as regards color, to the printer of the card. We shall come upon this again in the press room."

"Did you not say lithography was printing

He pointed to some slabs of smooth cream gray stone three or four inches thick "We did formerly make drawings directly on these stones," said he, "but their weight and size rendered them inconvenient both to handle and store. We print from stone, however, as I will show you. He led the way down stairs into a room full of mysterious machinery. "The artists were draw ing with hthographic ink," he resumed. "That is a greasy ink which sheds water perfectly. Now see how we transfer the drawing from the zinc to the printing

They saw nine prints taken in greasy ink from the zinc drawing. These were pasted upon a sheet of paper. This sheet was lable, print side down, upon a slab of well-polished stone. "This is lithographic stone," ex plained the manager; "we import it from Bavaria in Germany, the only quarries in the world where this quality exists lu quan tity.

A strong evon pressure from a heavy roller was now applied to the sheet upon the stone. Then the paper dampened, rubbed and washed off. The lines of the nine prints of the zine drawing remained upon the stone slab,

CHRISTMAS IN NORSELAND.

Christmas in Norway is not, as with us, brief comemeration of the birth of Christ, confined only to the day which the church has thred upon for this celebration. It is rather the winter vacation—a season of un-interrupted festivity, during which every one, high and low, takes his pleasure in ac-cordance with his taste. A man who has been sober all the year round, but regards being drunk as the highest form of happle ness, procures the needed supply of brandy, retires to his room, and "celebrates."

Auother, who prefers convivint celebration, goes to a dancing party and picks quarrels right and left, conducting himself as "the cock of the walk," until some one who cherishes the same ambition temporarily dlealites him.

Young people of higher tastes make up large sleighing parties, null descend en masse upon some rich neighbor, who, with open arms and the large-handed hespitality the host with his cheery poice encourages every one to do his test, and, perhaps, even himself treads a solate and stately waltz with the wife of his boson. When, at last, the tardy daylight surprises the revelers, the chances are ten to one that the hearty host will offer the whole company beds, and bid them stay and continue the merriment the next night. Then they may "go yule-bucks," that b, visit the neighbors round about with masks and in various grotseque diaguisos, and afford the latter an excuse for laviting them to another entertainment, and so "keep

Thus the helidays pass in the remote country districts in Norway; all business is interrupted, and Prince Carnival has full Among the poorer classes, who can not afford to celebrate at their own expense, it is common to send the children out as "star-boys,"that is, they pull white night-shirts on the outside of their ordinary gar-ment, and give them a large canvas star, with a lighted lantern inside of it. These children then go trudging through the deep snow, stopping at every house at the readside, and singing under the widows in their shrill child voices, Christmae carols of the Star of Bethlehem and the Child in the manger. Everywhere they are invited in and rewarded for their exertions with food and pennies.

It is one of the most pathetic features of Christmas in Norway-these white-robed little children with their red, frost bitten faces, and their shrill, eager, often dissonant voices. But life is hard up there under the Arctic circle for the young as well as the old; and a blessed relief from the daily struggle for bread is this brief holiday season, during which there is actually peace upon earth and good will among men.

THE NATIVITY. [From a painting by Raphnel." The Birth of Christ.

[larke II, 1-15. Revised Version Now it came to pass in those days there went out a decree from Casar Augustus that all the world should be snrolled. This was the Brst errollment made when Quirinus was governor of Syria. And sall went to enrol themselves, avery one to his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galliac, out of the city of Kezareth, into Judge, to the city of David, which is called Bethlahem, because he was of the brown and lamily of David, to enrol himself with Mary, who was betrethed to him, being great with child. And it came to pass, great with child. And it came to pass, while they were there, the days were fulfilled that she should be delivered. And she throught forth her first-horn son; and she wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid, him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn.

And there were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock. And an angel of the Lord shoot by them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Be not afraid; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people; for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviaur, which is Christ the Lord. And this is the sign unto you; Ya shall find a babe wrapped in awadding clothen, and lying in a manger. And suddealy there was with the angal a multitude of, the heavenly host praising that, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace smong men in whom he is well

DARK DAYS.

I ran madly on, but not for long. My foot enught in a atone, and I fell, half stunmed and quite breathless, to the ground. It was some minutes before I recovered myself ippa must have obtained a start which, coupled with her frenzied speed, almost pre-cluded the possibility of my evertaking her.

Moreover, a strange, uncontrollable puise swayed me. The touch of that deadly weapon still burned my hand. Philippa's words still rang in my ears. "Oa, on, on, up the road yet awhile?" she had e-i-d, What did she mean? What had been a we to-night1

I must retrace my steps. I must see! I must knew! Philippa is flying through tha cold, dark, deadly-night; but her frame is but the frame of a woman. She must seen grow exhausted, perhaps sink senseless on the road. Nevertheless, the dreadful fears which are growing in my mind must be set at rest; then I can resume the pursuit. At all cost I must know what has happened!

Once mora I turned and faced the storm. Heavens! snything might happen on such a night as this! I went on and on, flashing lantern as I went on the centre and each my lantern as I went out the distance past side of the road. I went some distance past that spot where I judged that Philippa had swept by me. Then suddenly with a cry of I slopped short. At my very feet, in the middle of the highway, illumined by the disk of light cast by my fantern, lay a whitened mass, and se ray eya fall upon it I knew only too well the meaning of Phi ippa's wild exclamation, "The wages of sime

Sir Mervyn Ferrand had paid for his sin with his life!

Dead! Before I kneeled beside him and after unbuttoning his coat, laid my hand ou his breast, I know the man was dead. Before I turned the lantern on his white face ! know who the man was. Sir Mervyn Ferrand had paid for his sin with his life; Il needed little professional skill to determina the cause of his death. A builet fired, it seemed to me, at close quarters had passed absolutely "through the heart. "He must have fallen" without a mean. Killed, I knew, by the hand of the woman he had

A sneering smile yet lingered on his set features. I could even imagine the words which had accompanied it, when swift and sudden, without one moment's grace for repentence or confession, death had been meted out to him. At one momant he stood erect and full of life, macking, it may be, her who had trusted him and had been betrayed; at the next, before the sentence he was speaking was completed, he "lay lifeless at her feet, with the snow-flakes beginning to form his winding-sheet!

Oh, it was vengeance! swilt, deadly vengeance! But why, oh, why had she wreaked it? Philippa, my peerless Philippa, a murderess! Ob. 18 was too fearful, too horrible! I must be dreaming. All my own thoughts of revenge left me. It was for the time pity, show pity, I felt for the man, cut off in the prime of his life. While I knew he was allve-I could look forward to and picture the minuto when we should stand coolly seeking to kill one another, but now that he was dea I hated him no longer. Ah! sleath is a sacred thing. Dead! Sir Mervyn Ferrand dead, and slain by Philippn!

It could not be true! It should not be true Yet I shuddered as I remembered the passion are had thrown into those words, "Basil, did you seer hate a man? I gave a lowery of angulah as I rediembered how. I had hurled from me the platel she had let fail—the very weapon which had done the dreadful

Killed by Philipps! Not in a audien burst of uncontroliable passion, but with deliberate intent. She must have gone armed to meet him. She must have shot him through the heart; must have seen him fail. Then, only then, the horrible deed which she had wronght must have been fully realized. Then she had turned and fled from the spot in a frenzy. Oh, my poor giri! my poor

Utlerly bewildered by my anguish I rose from my knees and stood for a while beside the corner. It was in that moment I learned bow ntuch I really loved the woman who had done this thing. Over all my grief and borror this love rose paramount. At all cost I must save her—save her from the hands of justice; save her from the flerce elements which her tender frame was even at this moment braving. And as I recalled how she had sought me yesterday, with the tale of her wrong—how she had wildly fled from me a few minutes ago, madly, blindly into the night; as I thought of the injuries she had suffered, and which had led her to shed this man's blood; as I contrasted her in her present position with what she was when first I knew her and loved her, the pity began to fade from my heart; my thoughts toward the lifeiess form at my feet grow stern and sombre, and I found myself bezimilig, by the old code of an eye for an eye, to justify, although I regretted Philippa's fearful act. Hight or wrong, she was the woman I loved; and I swore I would save ther from the consequences of her crime, even—Heaven help us!—if lie accusation, when made, must fall upou my who know whither her hower may have idriven hart it meds but to find. Philippa lifeless on the road to complete the heaviest tale of grief which can be exacted from one man in one short night! I clinched my teeth and rushed on.

I had the road all the road to myself. No one was abroad in such weather. Indeed, few persons were seen at night in eny weather in this lonely part of the sountry. I made straight for my own house. The dismal thought came to me that inhest Phillppa kept to the road she was lost to me erover. If she strayed to the right or to the laft, how on such a night could I possibly flad her? My one hope was that ehe would go straight to my cottage; so thither I made the hest of my way. If she had not arrived, I must get what assistance I could and seek for her in the Helds to the right and left of the road. It was a dressy comfort to remember that all the ponds and speces of wate, were frozen six inches, blck.

I hesitated a moment when I reached he returned thither! No: whom morning revealed the ghartly event of the night, my

Let me first go home.

"Home at lest, "In a moment I shail know the worst. I opened the slide of my lantern, which was still alight, and throw the rays os the path which led to my door. My heart gave a great bound of thankfulness. There on the snow, not yet obliterated by more recent flakes, were the prints of a small foot. Philipps, as I prayed, but scarcely dured to hope she might, had come straight to my house.

My man opened the door for me. It was well I had seen those feetprints, as my knowledge of Philippa's arrival embled in lo assume a natural air.

"My elster has come?" I asked. "Yes, sir; about a quarter of an hour ago "We missed each other on the read. What a night!" I said, throwing off my mow-covered coat. "Where is she now!" I asked. ered cost. "In the sitting room, sir." Then, lowering his voice, William added: "She seemed Just about in a tantrum when she found you weren't at home. I expect we shall find he a hard lady to please."

William, in spite of his stelldity, occucloually rentured upon some liberty when ad-

His words grantly surprised me. I force myself to meka some laughing rejoinder; then I turned the handle of the door and en tered the room in which Philippa had taken

Oh, how my heart throbbed! What would she say to mel What could I, fresh from that dreadful scope, say to her? Would she excuse or pallies, would she simply confess or boidly justify, her crime? Would she plead her wrongs in extenuation? Would she assert that in a moment of ungovernable rage she had done the deed! No matter what she said; she was still Philippa, and even at the cost of my own life and honor would save her.

Yet as I advanced into the room a shudd t ran through me. Fresh to my mind camthe remembrance of that white face, that still form, lying as I had left it, with the pure white snow falling thickly around it.

Philipps was sitting in front of the fire. Her hat was removed, her dark hair dis-heveled and glesming wes with the snow which had melted in it. She must heve heard me enter and close the door, but she took no notice. As I approached har site turned her abouider upon me in a pattish way, and as one who by the action means to signify displeasure. I came to her side and stood ever her, waiting for her to look up and speak first. She must speak first: What can I say, after all that has happoned to-night!

But she kept a stony silence-kept he eyes still turned from mine. At last I called her by har name, and, bending down, looked into her face. Its exprassion was one of sullen anger, contempfuous gesture as if waving me "Philippa," I said, as steraly as I could,

"speak to me!"
I laid my hand upon her arm. She shook it off flercely, and then started to her feet. "You esk me to apeak to you," she said; "you who have treated me like this! Oh, it le shameful! shameful! I come through storm and snow-come to you, who were to welcome me as a brother! Where are you! Away, your wrotched servant tells me. Why are you away? I trusted you! Ob, you are a pretty brother! If you had cared for me or respected me, you would have been here to greet me. No! you are all in a leagueall in n league to ruln me! Now I am here. what will you do! Poison me, of course kili me, and make away with me, even as that other doctor killed and made away with my poor child! Hadid! I say ha did! I saw him do iti. 'A child of shame,' ha eaid; so ba killed Iti All, all, ali-even youyou, whom I trusted—leagued against me?"

She was trembling with excitement. Her words ran one into the other. It was as much as I could do to follow them; yet the above is but a brief condensation of what ehe said, With uncheckal volubility she continued to heap reproaches and accusations, many of which were of the most axtravagant and frivolous nature, on my head. At last she was silent, and resented herself in her former attitude; and the sulien, discontented, ill-used look again settled very lif. Between us we here her to her on her face.

And yet, aithough I, who loved her above all the world, was the object of her floree repreaches, no words I had yet listened to came more sweetly to my eer than these. A great joy swept through me; a tide of relief bore me to comparative happiness. Whatever dreadful deed the poor girl had that night accomplished she was morally lunocent. Philippa was not accountable for her actions! As a doctor I read the truth at once, The rapid flow of words, the changing moods, the vehement excitament, the sulfar air, the groundless suspicions-one and all carried conviction, and told me what was wrong. Mrs. Wilson's words of yesterday which warned me that Philippa's health should be inquired into, added absolute cer-

My professional brethren who may he ppen to read this will understand me when I say that, although it is long since I have practiced as a doctor, I am sorely tempted, as I reach this stage of my story, to give in detail the particulars which induced me to arrive at such a belief. No physician, no sur-geon, lives who does not feel it his duty as well as his pleasure to give an accurate oc count of any out-of-the-common case which has come under his notice. But I am no writing these pages for the benefit of science; and having no wish to make my tale assume the authority of a hospital report, sind re-

In short, then, Philippa' had fallen a vic-tim to that mania which not uncommonly shows itself after the birth of a child-that dread, mysterious disease which may, at the moment when everything seems going well, turn a house of joy into a house of mourning; a disease the source of which I have no hesitation in saying has not yet been properly traced and investigated. So far as I know, there is no monograph on the subject, or certainly there was none at that time. Btill, It is admitted by all the authorities that this species of insanity is not unfrequently produced by a severe mental shock,

SPLENDID Bananse, Lamons, Cocoanuts Where should I seek her? Who kne wwhat SPLENDID Bananas, Lamona, Cocos her remorse may have urged her to do Ac., very cheap at T. R. Walton's columny when that shock is accompanied by an overwhelming sense of abame. Sta-tistics show us that umarried women who are mothers, and feel the degradation of a position acutaly, are peculiarly liable to be attacked by the mysterious malady. Esquirol was, I believe, the first to notice this fact, and the correctness of de view has subsequently been confirme by many others.

Such being the case, it is small wonder that Philippa, waking yesterday moraing to receive the intelligence that her marriage with Sir Marvyn Ferrand had been a farce, should have been thrown into a state exbremely ensceptible to the attack of the disease. Mer carsism exposure of herself to the wintry air, when last night she sought me and claimed my aid, most probably hastaned the attack of the foe. Mrs. Wilson had noticed her strange manner. I myself have remarked upon her capid changes from calumess to excliability. It was clear to me that even when she visited me last night the mischief had begun to develop itself. I blamed my blindness bitterly. I ought to have also, what was wrong. Considering her agitated state, I ought to have been werned, and have taken precautions; but I had attributed those fitful changes, the meaning of which was now only loo plain to me, to the natural agitation experienced by a passionate yet pure-minded woman, who found hersell betrayed and brought to shaue. Oh, had I but guessed the real cause, or rather the way in which her grief had affected her, all the dark work of that night might have been left undonei

Although in many ways it added to the difficulties and dangers which surrounded us, the discovery of the truth was an unspeakable relief to me. No right-minded man could now call the poor girl guilty of crims. The men's blood was indeed on her hands; yet she had shed it, not knowing what she did. Her frenzy must then have been at its height. The idea of his coming that night must in some way have occurred to her. The desire to see him most have driven her to go and most him. Her wrongs -perhaps the dread she now felt of him-may have induced her to arist herself; perhaps the carried the weapon for self-protection. Any way, she was mad when she started; the was mad when she draw the trigger; she was mad when she broke from my grasp; she was mad now as she sat by my thre, eyeing me with morose, auspicious glances She was mad-and innocent!

Her manuer toward me troubled me but little. It is a well-known peculiarity of the disease that the patient turns with hatred from those who were the nearest and dearest to ber. Fits of sullen, etubborn silence, alternating with flerce outbursts of vitupera-tion, are the most common characteristics of the mania. Hideous, startling as it is to see the change wrought in the sufferer, the malady is by no means of such an alarming nature as it seems. In fact the majority of Cases are treated with perfect auccess.

But all this is professional talk. Again ; say that the discovery of Philippa's state of mind was an impress relief to me. My conscieuce was cleered of a waight which was pressing upon it. I felt braced up to the every effort, and thoroughly justified in following whatever course I thought beat. Moreover, a naw relationship was now established between Philippa and myself. For swhile every feeling save one must be banshed. We were now doctor and patient,

After much persuasion Linduced her to let me feel her pulse. As I expected, I found it up nearly to one hundred and twenty. This did not alarm me much, as in the course of my practice I had seen several of these The preliminary treatment was slmple as A B C; at all cost sleep must be ob-eine chest. In a few minutes I had pre pared the strongest dose of opium which I fared to administer. In such a case as the present I knew that no dribbets would avail: o I measured out no less than sixty drops of landanum. Sleep the girl must have. as she heard my voice. She made a kind of poor seething, boiling brain must by artificial means be forced to rest for hours. After that rest I should be able to say what chance there was of saving life and reason.

But preparing a dose of medicine and haking a patient like this to take it, ere two lifferent things I tried avery art, every persuasion. I implored and commanded, i threatened and insisted, Philippa was obinrate. Poor soull she knew I meant to noison her. On my part, I knew that unless the awallowed that percetic to night her case was all but hopeless.

I rested for awhile; then I sent for lukewarm water. After some resistance she suffered me to bathe her throbbling temples The refreshing coolness which followed the operation was so grateful to her that she let me repeat the action again and again. A soft and more contented look settled on her beautiful face.

I seized the moment. Once more I pressed tha potion upon her. This time successfully, My heart trembled with joy as I saw her swallow the drug. Now she might be saved!

I still continued the comforting laving of her temples, and wailed until the drug took its due affect. By and by that moment came. The large dark eyes closed, the weary head The large dark eyes closed, the weary head sank beavily on my shoulder, and I knew that Philippa lind entered upon a term of mercifal obliviop.

I waited until her sleep was sound as the leep of death; then I summoned my man. I had already told him that my slater her dress, cut the wet boots from her cold feet, did all I sould to promote warmth and such comfort as was possible under the cir-cumstances. Then I left her, sleeping that heavy sleep which I prayed might last un-broken for hours, and hours, and hours.

It is capital fun, we assure you. Any number can play, but each 'player must be provided with a sheet of white paper and a pencil. All must then nurk five dots in any arrangement on the piece of paper before him, and pass it to his next neighbor at the He then takes the dotted paper which has been hunded to him, and tries to draw on it some human figure in such a posture as to bring one of the five dots at the middle of the top of the forehead, one at the point of each foot, and one at each hand. But no one must take longer than a certain time, say five or ten minutes, in making his picture. The results sometimes are very aughable, and the game calls for a good deal of invention and skill.

Semichody Else's "Fatted Calf."

[The Current.] Bitter is the life of the man who, during the gay month of December, has to conceal money difficulties from his family and dare not chill the exuberant holiday joy. But by far the greater portion of men have none of the semiltiveness which makes each debt a swollar fallows of their fallows. They laugh, and are merry, and kill the fatted calf—of somebody elm. They will hold high wastell in Christmas-tide, although the heavans may fall. But such mortals are meful. We must have the glddy music of Offenbach as well as the Gregorian chant.
